PREFACE.

SOCIETIES whose funds are available for the support of their sick, infirm, superannuated, disabled, and unemployed members, and for affording aid to families bereaved by death, have long been the pride of all intelligent men; and it will be admitted that those who, by forethought and self-denial, make such provision for themselves and families, not only contribute to their social, moral, and intellectual advancement, but, by strict adherence to rule and discipline, acquire a knowledge of business which qualifies them for positions of responsibility and trust.

Unhappily, by a fluctuating commerce, many who depend for the necessities of life on their daily toil are often deprived of employment. They wander through the streets of town or city day after day seeking to regain employment, but, alas! in vain; returning to their homes with the too oft-repeated words, "No work again." This continues until upon many an honest man's mind rests, like an incubus, the thought, when and how shall I relieve myself of debt? Debt, so much dreaded by every honest woman, who heaves her lonely sighs and sheds her silent tears ! Debt, the natural effect of which slowly but surely deprives of self-respect, and changes many an honest man into a dishonest one, after having, it may be, for many long years struggled to maintain the former character ! Devoid of humanity must be the men who are not willing to relieve these distresses, and to prevent, in some degree, this wreck of character, by uniting to support their brother whilst seeking work but finding none.

The prolific character of the Anglo-Saxon race rapidly increases the population, and causes many of the most intelligent of our skilled artisans to resort to emigration as a means of improving their social position. The inhabitants of the lands of their adoption they are destined to bless by stimulating their industry and developing their commercial resources ; and thus the comforts and happiness of the people will become greatly augmented.

The Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners offers a bond of union to the trade in various parts of the world. Although oceans may separate us from each other, our interests are identical ; and if we become united under one constitution, governed by one code of rules, having one common fund available wherever it may be required, we thus acquire a power which, if judiciously exercised, will protect our interests more effectually and will confer greater advantages than can possibly be derived from any partial union.

Let those of us who know the practical value of association, manifest our attachment to it by promoting its advancement with energy, and embrace every opportunity of making it known and valued by those whose duty and interest it is to unite with us. Doing this, we leave to future generations the means of conserving their best interests ; trusting that our children may see the universal establishment of productive and distributive co-operative societies, which already give promise of becoming the means by which workmen may derive greater benefits arising out of their own industry.

But we shall be faithless to our fellow working men if we omit to record our honest conviction that this much-to-be-desired condition must be preceded by the equally universal spread of the principles of economy and sobriety, which would be accelerated by our meeting for business in public halls or private rooms, where, by the establishment of libraries, and listening to the voice of the lecturer on all subjects connected with our interests, we and our sons shall become respectful and respected, and make rapid progress in the onward march of reform.

If he obtain employment for three days or more before he has received the full amount of $67.20, and again claims unemployed benefit, the B.S. must once more refer to his benefit book, and ascertain the amount which has been received within twelve months of the date of the last application, and if the member has received less than $42 he must be paid at the rate of $3.50 per week until $42 has been received, after which time he must be paid at the rate of $2.10 per week. When a member has received the full amount of $67.20 he must not simply be suspended from benefits for four weeks, but he must "work four successive weeks before he can again claim unemployed benefit, and must receive the average wages of the town in which he is employed." When he again claims unemployed benefit, the B.S. must refer to his benefit book, and ascertain the amount the member has received within twelve months of the date of his last declaring on benefit, and if it be less than $67.20, he must be paid the balance due to him in accordance with the instructions laid down.

It shall also state the dates of each time when he commenced and ceased to receive sick or unemployed benefit within twelve months previous to his last declaring on benefit, and up to the date of the clearance. Neglecting to attend to this within a fortnight after he has been requested, the B.S. shall be fined 88 cts.

1. Should any free member be out of employment under circumstances satisfactory to the Branch four successive working days or more, although Sunday may intervene, or any four days in one week from Monday to Saturday, if he be not suspended from benefit in accordance with the tabular form in Rule 8, he shall, on signing the vacant book each day, be entitled to the sum of $3.50 per week for the first twelve weeks, whether successive or not, and a further sum of $2.10 per week for another twelve weeks, whether successive or not, making a total of $67.20 in one year, such year to date twelve months back from each time the member applies for unemployed benefit. If during that time the member has received the sum of $42, whether at the rate of $3.50 per week or not, he shall only be entitled to $2.10 per week while he is receiving the remainder of the $67.20. If he has received the said full amount in the past year, he shall work four successive weeks before he can again claim unemployed benefit, and must receive the average rate of wages of the town in which he is employed; but should he be out of employment less than four days he shall not be entitled to benefit. Any member signing the vacant book in the forenoon, and afterwards obtaining employment and working during the latter part of the day, shall for that day be disentitled to unemployed benefit; and in no case shall less than one day's unemployed benefit be paid. Any member omitting to sign the vacant book, for the purpose of evading any part of this clause, shall be at once dealt with, the same as members who have drawn the sum of $67.20.

Any member in receipt of unemployed benefit, and obtaining employment for three or more days, but not more than six days, must again sign the vacant book for three days before he is again entitled to unemployed benefit; but should he obtain employment for less than three days, he shall be entitled to unemployed benefit the first day he again signs the vacant book. Any member losing his employment through loss of tools by fire, water, or theft, or any sick member regaining his health and not having employment, shall be immediately entitled to unemployed benefit, if he be entitled to benefit in accordance with tabular form, Rule 8.

4. Free members signing the vacant book shall, in the event of employment being found for them in any particular locality, either by the G.S., the D.S., the B.S., a member, or an employer, in addition to their unemployed benefit, be entitled to the cheapest fare, whether by railroad, coach, or steamboat, unless the fare be paid by the employer, but no allowance shall be made for the carriage of tools. Members who have been six months in the Society, although not entitled to unemployed benefit, shall have their travelling expenses paid in the event of work being provided for them. Branch officers are desired to be very cautious in putting this clause into opera-
